Overview. Have you heard about Landscape Architecture? If you are in high school or are beginning college and interested in finding out more, Discover Landscape Architecture at the University of Illinois is for you! Here you can learn about the activities, the skills, the roles, and the projects that landscape architects enjoy. Landscape Architecture is a natural pursuit for those students with interests in architecture, engineering, or natural resources, and also for students with interests in visual arts, horticulture, or environmental design.

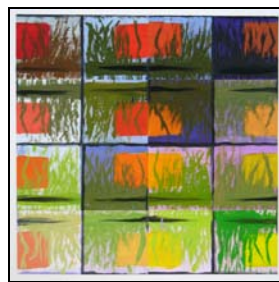

Discover Landscape Architecture is a design studio-based program, offering "hands on" experience in seeing and making the world in new ways. This program of instruction is intended for motivated students: it will be fun, engaging, and intense.

Studio & Seminars. In Discover Landscape Architecture, faculty and visiting professionals guide students in exploring their personal design process. During morning and afternoon sessions, students work on design exercises related to a comprehensive project. Films and slideshows introduce students to landscape architects, ideas, and projects. Evenings offer time for fun and discussion in a more informal atmosphere. Time is also devoted to learning about landscape architectural education, how to choose a university, and requirements for entering the profession. Individual instruction, field trips, small seminars, and periodic reviews culminate in a final presentation.
